(b) In Progress:

"Nigeria's Import Control under the military, 1972-1999"

This study examines series of economic policies and steps taken by successive military regimes from 1972 when Nigeria's Enterprise Promotion Decree also known as Indigenization Policy was promulgated to 1999 when the military disengaged from politics. The study examines the developmental strides of Nigeria through the control on imports despite the illegitimate emblem of the military institution. The paper reveals how the military used domestic production against imports to develop the production capacity of Nigeria.
