(a) Completed:

“Ibadan Market Women and Politics, 1900-1995”

(b) In progress:

“The Women went Radical: Petitions Writing and the Colonial State in Southwestern Nigeria,1900-1953”

This is a research work that interrogates archival and secondary sources. It is expected to publish as a monograph. I have examined petitions written by women to the colonial era. In many accounts of nationalists’ agitations in colonial Nigeria, the act of petitions writing by women did not receive, the much deserved attention Petitions written by women in colonial Yorubaland challenged the hegemony of colonial administrators, European merchants, the Lebanese, indigenous merchants and the traditional political system and it ultimately contributed to Nigeria's nation building. This research therefore examines the history of Yoruba women's participation in the nationalists and decolonisation processes. It analyses how Yoruba women deployed the use of petitions for social, political and economic emancipation. This study establishes the role of Yoruba women in nation building. The study is about to be completed.
